Edward the Explorer

Discovers New York and Amsterdam

By Elizabeth Jack

Edward the Explorer Discovers New York and Amsterdam

By Elizabeth Jack

"Wow", thought Edward as he pulled his little suitcase through the airport. He and his daddy were going on a huge adventure together and Edward could not wait.

This was a completely new experience for him. Edward had never been in an airport before and he felt a little nervous at the thought of going on an aeroplane but was very excited too.

Holding on to his Daddy's hand as tight as he could Edward was amazed at all the sights and sounds around him. Finally they arrived at a huge desk. Edward was too small to see over it but he could hear his Daddy speaking to someone. Edward jumped as high as he could but he still could not see anything. He saw his Daddy hand over some pieces of paper and also two little books. His Daddy then took Edwards little suitcase off him and placed it in the space beside the desk. That is when he eventually could see who his Daddy had been talking to.

As the lady leaned down she gave him a little smile and placed a colourful label round the handle of his little case.

Just then the little case began to move and eventually it was out of sight, Edward was a little confused by this: "Was he going to see his case again", he thought to himself. He looked up at his Daddy in amazement and asked: "Daddy, where has my case gone." "Don't worry, you will get it back when we have arrive at New York."

Edward could not believe his ears. "NEW YORK", he shouted. "New York in America! Is that where we are going?", he asked his Daddy.

Edward was so excited by now he thought he would burst. His Daddy gave him a little smile, took him by the hand and said to him: "We are going to have a fantastic time."

An exciting and adventurous tale of a young boy and his dad exploring the world together.

Written and Illustrated by Elizabeth Jack